ADVICE TO DRAMATIC CRITICS.

By Frank Daniels.

"In reviewing my play, 'The Belle of Brittany,' there are just two things I do not want said.

"First, please don't remark that 'Frank Daniels has a fine singing voice.' The less voice a comedian in comic opera has the better off he is. How much better off the audience is I do not know, nor will I attempt to say. If anybody said I had a voice I would feel very sad. I would go out and have it pulled immediately.

"Another thing which I resent is to have a critic write of me, 'He works like a Trojan.' I have nothing against the Trojans personally. They may work as hard as they choose, and I shall never interfere. It is their privilege to work if they wish to—but no work for mine. The true artist never works. When a man goes to the theatre to enjoy himself he likes to see actors easy on the stage. Therefore I resign in favor of the Trojans and the flip-flop artists."
